

The publication is dedicated to the functioning of the military independence conspiracy in the area of Union of Armed Struggle in Łańcut between 1939-1945. The division was one of the 14th in the AK Rzeszów Branch, which is now located in Podkarpackie Voivodship.

In the introduction part, the author has included the description of military actions in 1939 in the Łańcut county and the fights of the army units made of local residents, also it includes the description of the situation of the Łańcut county before 1939 and the conditions of occupation, occupant's politics towards the Polish community, minorities, and the emigration during wartime. It is supplemented with subsection on the formation of the German security apparatus and Polish Police.

The main part of the work is focused on the 5 chapters, starting with the description of the rise of the conspiracy structures of the Service for Poland's Victory, Union of Armed Struggle and other underground conspiracies subjected to the merging action from 1941. This is especially related to the people's and national conspiracy (Farmers Battalions, National Military Organization), which were created thanks to the pre-war political activity of the locals. Characteristics of the civil structures of the Polish Underground State in Łańcut county were also included. Publication also portrays the social base of the conspiracy, their organisational structure and human resources both of the command section of the division, army units and platoons. In the next two chapters' author describes the main directions of the work of the division, and their main military actions. The work finishes with section describing the Operation Tempest (Akcja "Burza") and the situation after the invasion of the Red Army. In this part the description of the relationship between the Red Army invaders and the civil population, relating it to the repressions towards the conspiracy soldiers made by soviet security apparatus receiving help from the "Polish" security apparatus.

Publication contains a supplement with picture register of the people graduating from the conspiracy army schools, their promotion letters, and the list of repressed people during the German occupation and those sent to the camps after the Red Army invasion. An integral part is the biographical dictionary, which contains information related to 172 members of the commanding division of the Union of Armed Struggle to section Łańcut. Its creation was mostly based on the freshly acquired material, not published before.
